

4. Some people think that students who do not take a break in studies between the high school and the university are at disadvantage compared to students who travel and work after high school before further continuing their education. Do you agree or disagree?

Introduction- Nowadays, in our competitive world, to succeed, knowledge from school and university is not enough. Therefore, students who study from the school to university get fewer benefits and contribute less too, compared to those students who travel or work and get experience and skills before continuing their education

- Students who study only gain theory. No doubt, theory is very necessary. However, one cannot do everything with just theory. Therefore, a person should have practical experience.
- Students taking break have most important things like skills and experience
- Students who study continually contribute less. Moreover, many companies, which employ people in, have to train them from ground-up.

Conclusion- Students should travel or work before going to the university. That way, not only will they have basic knowledge but also skills and experience
